Beit el-Yateem Milestone 75 years of Service

Beit el-Yateem, the Druze Orphanage in Abey, Lebanon, turns 75 years old this year. We wish a Happy Anniversary to an institution that has helped the Druze community through very difficult times as evident by the story as told by the late Aniseh Assaf.

Every Druze should be very proud of the accomplishment of the Orphanage and of the teams of dedicated individuals who have, in many cases, served this institution their entire lives.

The continued success of Beit el-Yateem is heavily dependent on generous donations from the Druze community worldwide.

Here, at DOCO, we cannot but be greatly thankful to our donors who have rallied behind the noble cause of helping our fellows. Every donation counts, and no matter how small, is always appreciated.

As DOCO serves multiple Druze charities, the donations go where you, the donors, direct them to go, as is reported in our newsletters.

DOCOC's annual Eid al-Adha campaign is as strong as ever. It is already a tradition at Beit el-Yateem where the students joyfully anticipate their pocket money from year to year. Thank you for bringing the smiles to their young faces regularly.

We also would like to thank the Rotary Club in Aley, Lebanon, for distributing food to impoverished families, in time to celebrate Eid al-Adha.

Finally, the entire DOCO team wishes you the best for the coming holiday season. May the New Year bring you and your loved ones all the blessings of good health and happiness.

The Beit el-Yateem Story

As told by the late Aniseh Assaf

By Kathy Jaber Stephenson

Late Aniseh Assaf

The year was 1939. Aref Nadadi, a very distinguished and devoted Druze community leader, decided to establish a Druze orphanage in Lebanon as at that time, there was not one for Druze children, although, one was desperately needed. Nakadi called for a general meeting with other community leaders and workers. They quickly responded and upon hearing his idea, gave their total support.

I attended that meeting along with numerous other ladies. Many of us volunteered to accept the tasks involved to turn this idea into a reality. One of our major duties was to collect donations throughout the Druze community.

The Adul-Khalik family in Beirut contributed their private Majlis (house of prayers) to be the first facility to house the orphans. As the word spread, the number or volunteers grew. Many of them journeyed to the Druze villages in search of the orphaned, poor, or needy children with the intentions of bringing them to their new home.

The Druze community began to respond with offers to help with whatever was needed to make Nakadi's dream come true. They donated money, clothing, food, books, furniture, toys and even their time to care and teach the children. Meanwhile, the fund raising efforts continued and grew. I was sent from Lebanon as a representative of the young orphanage, to appeal worldwide to Druze in other countries. Together with numerous lady volunteers in those countries, we raised thousands of dollars from generous Druze and good wishers. Then the Lebanese government began to supply funds for the orphanage.

Aref Ameen el-Nakadi: 1887-1975, a former justice minister in Syria and head of the Literature Academy there, founder of Beit el-Yateem, the Druze Orphanage in Abey, Lebanon

Finally, after some fourteen years, Beit el-Yateem housed 250 children in a fully equipped four-story building located in Karakool-al-Druze in Beirut. However, during 1955, the facility was turned into an elementary school, while the orphans were transferred to Aref's hometown, Abey in the Shahar region, for a better and more convenient location at the suggestion of the Ministry of Social Security.

Educational Support

Creates Community Wealth

If the prospects of an individual are inauspicious, can they be changed? Yes, they can, but only through education.

Education is the best tool to bring a positive change in society, to develop a generation of responsible individuals and contribute to the development of descent human beings.

The fundamental purpose of education is to gain knowledge. It is the means to develop oneself physically, mentally and socially and to develop the mind so that the individual can make good choices in life, make sound career decisions and begin pursuing his/her goals.

A good education should give one the courage to rise after every fall and to turn failure into success. It provides the key that not only opens doors to a better future but gives students tools to solve the various problems they are likely to face during their lives.

This is the reason that the Charitable Organization (DOCO) has focused its efforts on supporting education.

DOCO believes that investing in education will positively impact the overall success of our communities, society in general and indeed the whole world.

We hope that you and your family are enjoying good health and prosperity along with the DOCO team. We wish you all progress and success. The organization of the University Student Resident (USR), strives to insure the best services for our student residents, helping them to achieve a future strongly supported by a good education and good Druze moral values.

One of our annual activities is a fundraising breakfast. We would like to inform you that we held this event, under the auspices of Mrs. Nora Jumblatt, on Wednesday August 13th at the Ameer-Amine Hotel in Beit-el-Edeen. It was attended by 422 ladies and honored the ladies of Abu-Dhabi, who work like the unknown-soldiers to insure all kinds of support to our organization.

Finally, we sincerely thank you and your donors for helping us to achieve our goals.

Excellence in Educational Achievements

The Druze Foundation for Social Welfare was founded in 1983 in order to take care of the relief work in the war zones of Lebanon during the unfortunate events of that time.

Later on, it took the responsibility of supporting the Druze families of the martyrs and the disabled. Over a period of twenty years a total amount of USD 7,500,000 was disbursed to accomplish these goals.

The Druze Foundation for Social Welfare – Scholarship Fund at the AUB (American University of Beirut) was established in 2002, to provide scholarships to academically qualified and financially needy Druze students, who are seeking university education at the American University of Beirut.

Purpose of the Scholarship Fund at AUB:

The value of quality Education that the AUB offers.

Being a graduate of a reputable university in Lebanon Provides a better chance of finding a proper job.

All donations that go to the Fund are generously matched by the AUB.

Education is one of the gates to knowledge; and that knowledge is a gateway to freedom of thought, of choice, and of action. We believe that by being exposed to the best a good education can offer, students will acquire wisdom which will enlighten them and guide their steps to become assets to their families, communities and society.

Your contribution is your commitment not to any education, but to the ideals of liberal education, of which American University of Beirut is a fountain.

The following is an excerpt from AUB President Dr. Peter Dorman's speech, at DFSW Annual Dinner 2009:

“These men and women graduate from AUB with a deep and profound appreciation for the opportunity they had to pursue their educations at a university where tolerance is actively fostered, where responsibility is encouraged, and where diversity is celebrated. Proceeds from the DFSW – Scholarship Fund are being used to provide scholarships for academically qualified and financially needy Druze students. I am very grateful for your increasing support for Druze students at AUB, and note that your annual donation the American University of Beirut is proud to match.”

The Scholarship Fund has granted 372 scholarships in the amount of USD 1,600,000 since its inception. Each dollar contributed to the Fund has been matched by the AUB. Your kind contribution will be highly appreciated by our beneficiaries.

Thirty students benefited from the Druze Foundation for Social Welfare – Scholarship Fund, at the American University of Beirut for the academic year 2013 – 2014.

These students enrolled in Freshman, Sophomore, Junior and Senior classes. They pursued majors in Business Administration, Biology, Chemistry, Chemical Engineering, Computer Science, Civil Engineering, Computer & Communications Engineering, Electrical & Computer Engineering, Mechanical Engineering, Environmental Health, Mathematics Education, Medical Laboratory Sciences, Nutrition & Dietetics, Philosophy, Physics, Sociology and Anthropology.

DFSW's contribution to the Fund was $115,797.09 which was matched by the AUB for a total of $231,594.18.

The children of
Beit al-Yateem wish you
a Happy New Year 2015

Dear Dr. Muakasa,

Please be informed that we are in receipt of your transfer in the amount of USA 3, 200 (Three Thousand Two Hundreds US Dollars), which is a donation by Dr. Bedri Zeineldeen in support of the student Mr. Karem Zahreddine tuition fee at Notre Dame University in Lebanon.

Dear ladies and gentlemen, generous donors,

Please accept my greetings with sincere appreciation, from our precious country Lebanon. May the almighty grant you good health and happiness.

It is with pleasure that I wish you a happy and prosperous Eid-al-Adha, hoping that you may enjoy its abundance. I thank you deeply for your noble passion and genuine desire in supporting Beit al-Yateem so it can remain the warm environment for our dear orphans, and impoverished students, while preparing them for a brighter, more promising future, supported by a good education and good moral character.

Had it not been for the generous support of philanthropists in Lebanon and abroad, it wouldn't have been possible for us to continue our mission in the current economic situation.

This year we celebrate the 75th anniversary of our institution, which has provided hundreds of young ladies and gentlemen with the tools needed to make it in their professional and social lives.

Today we have five hundred orphans and needy students. They enjoy the safety of a warm shelter, and everything they need in their daily lives, as well as good education starting from Kindergarten till the Vocational Baccalaureate part II.

Nakadi decided to relocate the orphans in buildings which were available around the Shrine of Assayed Abdallah, planning on building another Beit el-Yateem in the area as soon as he possibly could. Abey had been the home of his family for hundreds of years.

According to (the late) Professor Dr. Sami Nassib Makarem, the village of Abey itself was a town of piety during the reign of the Tanoukhs (ruling Druze emirs). There were many shrines there. The Shrine of Sayyed Abdallah is the tomb of the Prince, Emir Jamaladeen Abdallah Tanoukheh, the most learned commentator on Druze scriptures. He lived during the Fifteenth Century and is said to have been the most pious of sheikhs (Druze religious leaders) to appear after the Dahwah (accepting the Faith). The tomb of his son is in the same building. This holy place is very much revered by the Druze.

As if Providence decreed it, money from donors flooded in as news to build the institution reached Druze throughout the world. In 1963, with financial aid from the Druze community, and with the great help from the Social Security Ministry in Lebanon, a modern and well-equipped orphanage was built next to the holy burial site of Sayyed Abdallah. During 1982, over 500 orphans between the ages of four to sixteen years of age lived in Beit el-Yateem, in addition to 100 needy children. The facility expanded to include a technical school so that the orphans could get a higher education and learn a trade or profession.

Some years back, Nakadi began publishing a magazine from the orphanage. It was called "Al Mithack." In it, every contributor's name was listed. Often, instead of money, people would donate special services or clothing, food, fresh produce, olives, olive oil, even sheep. Everything that was given to the orphanage was itemized and published in "Al Mithack". In addition, Aref Nakadi made sure that every penny spent was accounted for. In this way, he was trusted by the donors.

From the beginning days of the orphanage, Shakeeb Nakadi worked side-by-side with his cousin, Aref. He was always there to be counted on. So during 1975, when Aref Nakadi died at the age of 88 (after tutoring the orphanage, as if to say 'farewell'), the heavy burden of carrying the tasks Beit el-Yateem fell on Shakeeb's shoulders and some devoted and loyal employees along with Shakeeb's active and kind wife, Hayat, who was his right hand (and is still directing the day to day operation of the orphanage).

The Sayyed Abdallah Shrine after it was destroyed

The civil war in Lebanon exploded during the late summer of 1975. As factions fought factions, villages and towns were bombed, shelled and leveled. There was no one area untouched by the fighting. Refugees were rampant throughout the country. Some found shelter at Beit el-Yateem.

Children helping to rebuild their school

The orphanage, the shrine, indeed, all of Abey were shelled and bombed more than once during the civil war of 1975. At one time, a large bomb dropped on top of the roof crashing into the section where the orphans slept. Fortunately, the area was unoccupied when the damage occurred. That night and for 23 days and nights after, orphans, employees, refugees, Shakeeb Nakadi and everyone in the institution took shelter under the ground-floor of the building.

Throughout these years, the orphanage was shelled periodically. Through some miracle, no one was ever killed or seriously wounded. And the orphanage buildings proved stable and strong by resisting any serious damage. Fearing the worst, Shakeeb Nakadi sent all of the orphans and everyone in the institution away, making arrangements for children to stay with close or distant relatives. He, along with his family of five, remained in his home in Abey.

Shakeeb Nakadi and his family had to flee Abey and took refuge in the Capucine Convent which was converted to an orphanage, near Beit el-Yateem. The nuns there hid him and his family as they had become good friends during the years of civil war, sharing food and necessities. That same day, a group of Capucine nuns placed a petition on the door of Beit el-Yateem. It read: Do not destroy this building. It is an institution. The people are our friends.

Hidden safely, the Nakadis remained with the nuns for seven days. Through the eight-year-old civil war, they had remained close and dependable friends, these orphanage keepers. "I will share with them, until the last sack of flour I have!" Nakadi was heard to have said, referring to his Christian friends.

After hearing of his travails, the Islamic Center for Orphans in Beirut sent word that they were willing to take the Druze orphans – no matter how many and at no cost. "We are brothers in our work," they said. Nadkadi was ecstatic. He immediately left for Beirut.

Over 100 of the Druze orphans were received in Beirut. Making out as best they could, the others stayed in the Mountains as traveling to Beirut was very dangerous. A friend, Mahmoud Hasanini, offered Shakeeb Nakadi an office in Beirut. He accepted. And he continued to publish the Beit el-Yateem magazine, "Al Mithack." Through this magazine, he kept the many orphanage supporters informed as to what had happened in Abey and on the condition of the orphans, as well as he could.

It was February 14, 1984. The Druze came back to their villages. They found four villages had been particularly hit hard. Kfarmatta, Bennay, Bawerta and Abey. Every house in Abey had been hit with shells. Many were blown up with TNT. Everything was destroyed even the Sayyed Abdallah Shrine.

Shakeeb Nakadi was among the first people to be allowed to re-enter Abey. But Shakeeb knew he had to go. He had to see what had happened to the orphanage. And so there it stood, Beit el-Yateem, a blackened shell. Nakadi stepped inside. As he walked through the structure he saw that everything had been ransacked and destroyed: classroom desks, kitchen equipment, bedroom furnishing torn apart, shredded and mutilated. The technical school was the same: what was not looted was ripped apart and mangled. There was nothing left of Beit el-Yateem, except a shell of a building filled with debris and chaos.

He walked to his home. His house (a historical site) and every Nakadi abode had been blown up: leveled. They had lost everything. Every material possession they owned in Abey was destroyed. Aref Nakadi had collected a library of rare and choice books and manuscripts during his lifetime. Many of them dealt with the history of the Druze in Lebanon, and some were a distinctive accumulation of religious material on the Druze. A writer, he had many manuscripts ready for publication. They were all destroyed.

"You cannot imagine how sad I am," Shakeeb Nakadi wrote a friend. "The memories, the hundreds of years of memories in my house and those of my family and Beit el-Yateem; all those years of hard and continuous work, are lost, but I cannot leave this job that my cousin entrusted me to continue. I shall continue to do it as long as I live."

Shakeeb Nakadi sent word throughout the Druze community about what had happened to their beloved orphanage. "Whosoever is willing to help, will you please do so?" The response was overwhelming. People came to Abey from villages throughout the Shouf Mountains.

"We are ready to help, to build, to give our time, whatever we can do or whatever we can afford." And the Druze from around the world, emotionally distraught, began sending donations for the orphaned, even before they were asked for it. From Venezuela, Nigeria, Liberia, Australia, the U.S.A. and especially the Arab countries, funds were sent across the seas and over the skies to rebuild what had been destroyed. In every one of those countries, women's committees rose to the call to raise funds.

Like the fabled Phoenix, Beit el-Yateem rose again from its own ashes to live and thrive once more.

This article first appeared in Kathy Jaber Stephenson's publication, Our World Magazine, News and Views from the World Druze Community, Summer 1985. It is a tribute to the resiliency of the Druze people, their commitment to "safeguarding the brethren" and to the memories of Aniseh Assaf, called "Mother" by the Druze orphans. And it is dedicated to the memories of Aref al-Nakadi and his cousin Shakeeb al-Nakadi. They set the bar for the true Druze by dedicating their lives to the orphans. May God rest their souls.

Our deepest gratitude to: Aniseh Assaf and her sister, Afifi Assaf Masri for providing the details for the Biet el-Yateem Story, and to Leila Masri and Nabila Aboulhosn for translating Aniseh's Arabic to English during the taped interview.

DOCO: Today, thousands of orphans and needy have passed through its doors and many have graduated and became successful members of the community.

Entertainment Icon Casey Kasem

American entertainment icon and proud Arab American Casey Kasem, died on Sunday, 15 June 2014, in a Washington State hospital following a long illness. He was 82.

Manal Saab, who chairs both the American Druze Foundation board and the Arab American National Museum's National Advisory Board, was a personal friend of Kasem's. She recalls his dedication to his faith and community. "Casey was different than most celebrities. He always picked up the phone and he never said no to helping. My husband Ghassan and I had a personal relationship with Casey. He was Lebanese, Druze and from Michigan. Casey had the chance to visit Lebanon with his family in 1997 with relentless celebration."

Casey Kasem has long been celebrated as an iconic voice of American radio and music, and is also recognized as one of the most famous Arab Americans. He was born Kamel Amin Kasem in Detroit on April 27, 1932, to Lebanese immigrant father and Lebanese American mother. Like many Arab immigrants to Detroit at that time, Casey's father Amin owned a grocery store.

Kasem was a graduate of Wayne State University in Detroit, where he began his career by performing bit parts in radio dramas. He is a veteran of the U.S. Army who served as a DJ during the Korean War. In the summer of 1970, in collaboration with fellow Arab American broadcaster Don Bustany and other partners, Kasem launched his syndicated radio program, American Top 40, on just five radio stations. Soon the program was heard "coast to coast" on hundreds of stations and later became a TV show. Classic episodes remain on the air today.

Kasem also had a successful career as a voice-over actor, most notably as an NBC announcer and the voice of Shaggy ("Zoinks!") on the children's cartoon Scooby Doo, Where Are You!

In addition to his numerous accolades and awards, including a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame (1981) and induction into the Radio Hall of Fame (1992), Kasem was genuinely proud of his Arab heritage. "Whenever I can," he said in a 1983 interview, "I like to let people know that I am Lebanese, that I am Arabic, and that's my heritage. I'm an American first, but at the same time I feel strong ties going way back."

Casey - Kasem
Saturday Morning Cartoon - Shaggy

Several obituaries recount how Kasem's entertainment career was inspired by listening to his older relatives' one-upsmanship style of storytelling as a kid.

Throughout his career, Casey Kasem fought against media stereotyping of Arabs and Arab Americans, and always encouraged young Arab American media producers. He gave selflessly to many Arab American causes, including the Arab American National Museum, lending his sonorous voice to its 'Making An Impact' permanent exhibit and donating multiple items for display, including his Hollywood Walk of Fame plaque and the American Top 40 sign that hung on the program's Ventura Boulevard studio in Los Angeles. Kasem has been an honorary member of the AANM's National Advisory Board since the Museum opened in 2005.

Casey Kasem's legacy also includes the new $2 million Post-Doctoral Fellowship in Druze and Arab Studies at Georgetown University's Center for Contemporary Arab Studies, a first-of-its-kind program.

Casey's daughter, Kerri, also a great friend of the Arab American National Museum, is following in her father's footsteps professionally and through her community involvement.

A memorial service was held to celebrate his life at the American Druze Society's cultural center in Eagle Rock, Calif. It was attended by many Arab community leaders and friends who came to pay respect to the Kasem family. Kasem was an active member of the Druze community. He was a founding member of the American Druze Foundation and played an integral role in establishing the Society's Southern California cultural center.
